USPA NEWS - Pakistan’s Next Female Prime Minister at General Election Predicted Would Be Asifa Bhutto Zardari

Pakistan’s next female prime minister at a future general election is widely predicted by observers, commentators, and political thinkers to be Asifa Bhutto Zardari. Many within Pakistan and across the international community see her as one of the world’s most outstanding emerging political figures and a natural successor to the Bhutto legacy, said Shazada Hayat president UICF (UK) and international community welfare campaigner.
Asifa Bhutto Zardari, the youngest first lady of any nation in the world, is increasingly viewed as destined for the highest political office in Pakistan on her own merit and formidable personal qualities.

Asifa Bhutto Zardari possesses all the attributes, credentials, and leadership qualities required to become Pakistan’s next female prime minister and later a respected global stateswoman.
As the daughter of President Asif Ali Zardari and the late Shaheed Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto, Asifa Bhutto Zardari carries a historic political pedigree that few can match. Think tanks and political institutes around the world have noted that she displays all the political hallmarks associated with great leaders.

Comparisons are often drawn between her and iconic female leaders such as Margaret Thatcher, Indira Gandhi, Angela Merkel, and above all her own mother, Benazir Bhutto, the Daughter of the East and one of the most legendary figures in Pakistan’s political history.

Many believe that Asifa Bhutto Zardari is not only Pakistan’s future but also a future voice of moral authority on the global stage. At the same time, political analysts predict that Pakistan’s next prime minister in the near term is going to be Bilawal Bhutto Zardari, who is widely seen as a replacement-in-waiting for Prime Minister Mian Shehbaz Sharif. It is a well-known reality of Pakistan’s political landscape that President Asif Ali Zardari has the ability to change political outcomes with remarkable speed.

He is regarded internationally as a master strategist of Pakistani politics and diplomacy, capable of reshaping governments within hours. His role in bringing an end to General Pervez Musharraf’s rule, followed later by the fall of Imran Khan’s PTI government, is frequently cited as evidence of his political acumen. The current government itself is often described by commentators as surviving with President Zardari’s strategic support.
Shazada Hayat went on to say, President Zardari, widely known as the godfather of the Pakistan Peoples Party (PPP) movement, is actively mobilising political support to remove obstacles in the path of Bilawal Bhutto Zardari’s rise to the premiership.

Many had once believed that the PPP would not survive the assassination of Shaheed Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto, especially with three young children left behind and an uncertain political future.

However, President Zardari defied all odds. He not only preserved the party founded by Shaheed Zulfikar Ali Bhutto but elevated it to even greater heights. Under his leadership, the PPP achieved electoral victories, completed a full term in government for the first time in Pakistan’s history, and saw him become the only individual to serve twice as President of Pakistan.

Shazada Hayat said, Beyond politics, President Zardari’s personal role as both father and mother to Bilawal, Asifa, and Bakhtawar Bhutto Zardari is widely admired. He carefully nurtured and politically groomed Bilawal and Asifa as future Prime Minsters, following the footsteps of their legendary grandfather and mother.

This continuity ensures that the flame of Bhuttoism continues to burn brightly within Pakistan’s political life.
Asifa Bhutto Zardari is admired, respected, and loved by people across Pakistan regardless of political affiliation. Many view her as a true daughter of the nation and a jewel in the crown of Pakistani politics. Her inherent political pedigree, combined with her compassion, intelligence, and patriotism, makes her a rare and outstanding political figure not only in Pakistan but worldwide.

She embodies loyalty to her country and deep concern for the poor and working class, echoing her grandfather's famous slogan of "Roti, kapra aur makaan".
As the youngest child, Asifa shared a profound bond with her mother, whom she regards as a symbol of democracy, justice, and women's empowerment.

She stands firmly beside her brother Bilawal Bhutto Zardari, supporting him like a shield, believing he will unite the nation and fulfil the dream envisioned by their mother and grandfather of the next Prime Minister of Pakistan. Above all, Asifa Bhutto Zardari remains deeply devoted to her mentor and hero her father, President Asif Ali Zardari, and is determined to complete the unfinished mission for which her grandfather and mother laid down their lives. Asifa Bhutto Zardari is truly a gift to Pakistan's politics and the enduring legacy of Bhuttoism,
